What are the varying forms of delivery? Can I take this program online? YES!

This program is delivered through GC Flex.

What is GC Flex?

A GC Flex course means faculty deliver lectures and labs in the classroom and simultaneously online.

This means the course has a day and a time so that students can come in person, they can watch the lecture live virtually during the class time OR they can take the course asynchronously.

All students are in the same section. You just study the way that works best for you.

View the GC Flex ebook

Students wanting to study online asynchronously – PLEASE NOTE – because these courses are delivered in 3 different methods, the course you register into will show a day and time – if you choose to study asynchronously, you are not required to attend live classes, either virtually or on-campus but you MAY be required to be online for live group work, presentations or assessments.

Issues in Business 1

BMGT 1004

Course description

Through this seminar course, students select, strategically analyze and discuss current events in business. Research is conducted by examining relevant and reputable business periodicals and journals. The analysis includes a thorough discussion of the business impact of the events in question and modifications needed to capitalize on emerging opportunities or to mitigate potential threats. Newsworthy events for analysis are selected from local, provincial, and national business environments. By the end of this course, students have a deeper understanding of the impact that external events can have on business performance and employee productivity.
